Myer Solomon states that he always ~~was~~ heard his father say (during) that a great deal of money was lying in Chancery but as it was always understood that there was a great difficulty in the way of expense in recovering none of the family bothered much.

The Myer Solomon who left the money made his money by cane-planting, sugar distilleries etc in Kingston Jamaica. ~~He was still~~ He went to London after making considerable money, but retained interest in Jamaica
- said to have owned 1/2 of Kingston. Died in London.
After his decease one of the Trustees batted with about £300,000, a big lawsuit followed in London & considerable litigation followed & the whole of the estate was thrown into Chancery.

Myer Solomon (grandson) ^{about 17 years of age} was on his way to Jamaica to claim the estates when he was taken by malice. His brother ^(then about 16 yrs) too lackadaisical to bother after his decease, & little later came to Australia.

Myer Solomon (^{great} grandson) when in London in year 1857 was advised by his relations to take the matter up but owing to money being plentiful with him & the expected heavy costs likely to be incurred
